This project originated from my Ph.D. dissertation on the Nguyen Lords of southern Vietnam and their foreign relations. My connection with Vietnam began with an MA thesis on Vietnam-Malaysia relations. It has since led me to study Vietnamese history of an earlier period but from a solid contemporary perspective. In this endeavour I am grateful to Dr. Lee Kam Hing, formerly Professor in the Department of History, University of Malaya. Even after retirement, Dr. Lee has continued to offer advice and read many of my far from perfect drafts. However, equal appreciation goes to Professor Dr. Loh Wei Leng, who took over from Professor Lee for being extremely patient with me.

In Vietnam, many colleagues have generously shared their opinions with me regarding the subject. They also shared their ideas and pointed me to new materials. My thanks goes to Professor Phan Huy Le, Professor Vu Minh Giang, Professor Mai Ngoc Chu, and Professor Phan Dai Doan, all from the University of Social Sciences and Humanities, National University of Vietnam in Hanoi.

In France, I am particularly indebted to the late Professor Denys Lombard who invited me to Paris on two occasions to work in the research institutions there. The first in 1996 under the French Government's short term scholarship and the second occasion in 1998 as a visiting lecturer at the Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales. I am also indebted Professor Nguyen The Anh of the Ecole Pratique in Sorbonne University and Professor Claudine Salmon of the Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales and the Archipel group for accommodating me during my stay.

Special thanks goes to Dr. Po Dharma of the Ecole Francaise d'Extreme-Orient (also as head of the EFEO in Kuala Lumpur) and Mrs. Michelle Dharma Quang for their friendship and all the assistance rendered. I am also especially indebted to Father Dr.

Gerard Moussay, the Archivist of the Missions Etrangères des Paris who have been a wonderful friend, and who had assisted me in the most generous manner. I am also grateful to Brigitte, the archives assistant for her assistance. I also had the privilege of making the acquaintance of the late Professor Ralph Smith of SOAS in University of London. His comments and work has been both inspirational and insightful.

This study would not have possible without a generous research grant from the Toyota Foundation and the SEASREP Programme for which I am most grateful. I would like to also acknowledge the PHP Institute of Japan for a partial research grant in 1995 that allowed me to carry out research work.

I would like to thank the University of Malaya for granting me research leaves in 1995, 1996, and 1998 to carry out my research in Vietnam and France. For research in Vietnam, I would like to thank the Centre for Vietnamese Studies, Institute of Han-Nom Research, the National Library and the Institute of Historical Research, all at Hanoi and their helpful staff. For research in France, I would like to thank the directors and members of the Société Asiatique for allowing me to read their collections of documents, the Library of the École Française d'Extrême-Orient and the Archives of the Missions Etrangères de Paris. In Malaysia, I would like to offer my gratitude to the Librarians and staff of the University of Malaya Library, the National Library, and the EFEO Office in Kuala Lumpur. My thanks also to the Librarians of the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore for assistance rendered during the early stages of my research.

During my research, many also rendered help making the entire process of research most interesting and fruitful. Special thanks to Miss Tran Thuy Anh, Dr. Tran Thi Ly, La Tuan Anh, Vu Thi Hong Tuyet, and La Viet Anh who have made my trips to Vietnam particularly meaningful.

Special thanks also goes to Neil Khor, who read drafts of my thesis. My gratitude also goes to Mrs. Pauline Lee of the History Department for taking trouble to proof read the final draft.

At the Department of History, I am grateful Professor Abdullah Zakaria Bin Ghazali, my former Head of Department, for his kind support. Thanks also to Emeritus Professor Khoo Kay Kim for his interest in my work.

Lastly but definitely not forgotten is my wife, Mui Fung, who has been a pillar of support. Finally, the joy of writing and researching was tripled by the presence of children, May Esther, Tobias and Sarah.
